Abstract - Catalogue of the Late Pleistocene fossil mammalian collection from «Grotta Cucigliana» (Natural History Museum, University of Pisa). The upgraded catalogue of the paleontological collection of «Grotta Cucigliana» (Monte Pisano, Italy) is presented. The recovery of the material permitted to discover specimens that were previously considered dispersed. The catalogue includes all the determined species of the paleontological collection of Cucigliana (920 specimens). For each taxon, the collection number, the description of the specimen and the number of specimens (in parentheses) are reported.

Key words - Mammals, Late Pleistocene, Catalogue, Collections, Grotta Cucigliana.

Riassunto - Catalogo della collezione a mammiferi fossili del Pleistocene Superiore della «Grotta Cucigliana» (Museo di Storia Naturale dell'Università di Pisa). Viene presentato il catalogo aggiornato relativo alla collezione paleontologica della Grotta di Cucigliana (Monte Pisano, Italia). Il recupero del materiale, ha permesso di ritrovare alcuni esemplari che erano considerati dispersi oltre a riassociare dei cartellini isolati all'esemplare corrispondente. Il catalogo include tutte le specie determinate (920 esemplari). Per ogni taxon, viene riportato il numero di inventario, la descrizione dell'esemplare ed il numero di esemplari (tra parentesi).

INTRODUCTION

The Natural History Museum of the University of Pisa houses over 200.000 fossils relating to plants, invertebrates, and vertebrates. An important part of the paleontological collection, concerns the Late Pleistocene continental mammals (Barbuti & Landini, 2009).

This report is the first of a set of catalogues dedicated to the collections of the Late Pleistocene mammals hosted at the Natural History Museum of the University of Pisa.

The preparation of catalogues of the fossil material is of primary importance to define the precise amount of the history collection heritage of the University of Pisa. Moreover, the systematic review of these collections provided updated information about their scientific value (Farina, 2011).

Grotta Cucigliana (North Latitude 43°41'13.5" - East Longitude 10°33'12") is located at 28 m a.s.l. in the small centre of Cucigliana, near Vicopisano (Pisa), on the South-Western side of Monte Pisano. The fossil material was collected from 1879 to 1895 and was studied by several authors (Acconci, 1880; Del Campana, 1912; Del Campana, 1914; Mirri, 1999; Farina, 2011).

The paleontological collection of Cucigliana is now housed mainly at the Natural History Museum of the University of Pisa, with a small part stored at the Department of Archaeological Sciences of the University of Pisa. Part of the paleontological collection is also stored at the Museum of Geology and Paleontology of the University of Florence.

MATERIAL AND FORMAT

The paleontological collection of the Natural History Museum (University of Pisa), consists of 1013 specimens, including also 18 fragments of coal and terracotta artefacts, 14 only anatomically determined specimens and 61 completely indeterminate specimens (Farina, 2011). During the initial phase of search and recovery of the material, it was possible to find specimens that were considered dispersed or destroyed by the bombing suffered during the Second World War from the Museum of Geology of the University of Pisa, where the palaeontological collections were originally stored.

Furthermore, many isolated tags belonging to a previous inventory (the Canavari inventory) were also found (Fig. 1), but unfortunately they were not longer associated to the relative specimens.

The comparison between the fossil material, the old catalogues and inventories and the isolated tags, has permitted to rebuild and upgrade the paleontological collection of Cucigliana re-associating, when possible, the tags to the corresponding specimens.

The catalogue includes all the determined species of the paleontological collection of Cucigliana (920 specimens). For each taxon, the collection number, the description of the specimen and the number of specimens (in parentheses) are reported.
